ANGRY FROWNS

Somebody asks why people frown or scowl when angry. The frowning brow, the flushed face, the clinched fists and the general muscular tension are all part of what people still call the "expression" of anger. But thirty years ago William James in this country and Lange, in Denmark, both worked out a theory that the "expression" of an emotion really helps to make it—that if one did not feel the scowl, the flush, the tightening muscles, and all the inward bodily changes that go with them he simply would not be angry.

And James asks his reader to try the experiment and see how colorless the anger that he feels or tries to imagine really is when he lies back in an easy chair with a smile on his face and all his muscles relaxed.

The experiment is a good one, and it teaches a valuable lesson, for there can be no doubt that to manage the "expression" helps one to manage the emotion itself; though some of the bodily changes back of it, like the flush of the face or the altered beat of the heart, can not be controlled so directly and so easily as that part of the "expression" which depends upon the "stripped" or voluntary muscles.

But if the frown helps to make the emotion, what makes the frown?

Is it not something made on purpose, like the "faces" that children make at each other? But it is a useful form of action inherited from ancestors who go all the way back to the beginning of human life.

A flush, a frown, or a raised voice can break no bones; but it is a very good sign of something else that can—a sign that others learn to respect and thereby avoid a conflict that may mean wounds or death or both. So long as men will fight and dogs will bite and bulls gore and snakes will strike, scowls and barks and snorts and rattles are a means of safety for all concerned.

OLD BRICKS USED TO GIVE CHARM OF AGE

One of the newest things in home architecture is the return to the old.

A number of builders are using old bricks, for instance, to lend the charm of age, as well as an air of substantiality to their houses. Old bricks, it is said, are nearly twice as heavy as bricks made to-day.

The effect of the old hand-cut shingle is obtained by using split shingles, a machine product. These are larger and cleaner than the ordinary type. Instead of a thickness of one-quarter to three-eighths inches and a length of sixteen inches, the split shingle is from three-eighths to one half inch thick and twenty to twenty-four inches long.

Antique fixtures, such as wrought iron lanterns for the porch light or wrought iron candlesticks for the wall lights, are used effectively.

The stiff modernity of the concrete walk can be eliminated by using irregularly-shaped blocks of rock planed level. When grass and moss grow up between the rocks the effect is enhanced.

BRICK TAX MULTIPLIED NINE TIMES

It seems like a waste of space to quote Democratic objections to the pending Fordney-McCumber Profiteers' Tariff bill, which includes even salt in the articles of food taxed, and the medicines of the sick room, because the editorial columns of the Republican press throughout the country are filled with unqualified denunciations of the bill, extending even to unpleasant personal references to its sponsors.

The heights of profiteering and injustice were reached when sand was included in the list of things to be taxed and the duty on brick multiplied nine fold at a time when the housing situations, not only in the big cities, but even in the small villages, is almost unendurable. The outrageousness of such procedure was so great that even Senator Calder, a hard-boiled protectionist and a builder, admitted that even the present duty might be taken off.

This outrageous attempt to add further burdens to tenants and to home-builders was thoroughly ventilated by Senators Robinson (Ark.), and Stanley (Ky.), among the most effective of Democratic spokesmen, but no disposition was shown by the hard-boiled protectionists to recede from the amendment to the brick schedule increasing the existing rate from 25 to 225 per cent on bricks.

LUCKY MAN

(London Times)

There was a time when our fathers did not debate politics or the law with the womenfolk; nevertheless they listened attentively when their womanfolk chose to talk of the men and manners of the day. They understood that her detachment from the actual struggle gave woman a position to which man could not aspire. She spoke, in a sense her praise or blame amounted to a re-estimation of character in terms of values more enduring than political exigency.

It was this detachment of women which made small-talk both interesting and considerable. No man of any importance could escape its acid purge; blarney or bombast withered quickly under it. The place hunter, the crafty fellow, the mere babler soon found their level among the dames whose quick eyes discerned the man under the actor's cloak. Now if a woman still, in her heart, discerns the man she does not give him away, for she is committed to a party, a policy, which is his party, his policy. Argument has taken the place of epigram.
